

What participants have said:

- I have taken away from this course the confidence that I can begin to interculturalize the curriculum in my classes. You need to start somewhere and these 3 days have provided the impetus and skills to do that. I have a totally new lens through how I will see what needs to take place in my classroom. Thanks!
- By getting a group of highly motivated people together to look at and work with interculturalizing their courses is a benefit for the university. To attract and retain students, we need to be adaptive to the needs of students. This workshop / course definitely helps facilitate this.
- I attend workshops as a general rule – sometimes I learn “something” valuable. In the Interculturalizing the Curriculum workshops I learned many things about engaging students at a cognitive – and more importantly at an affective level in their work to understand and really integrate ideas about intercultural relationships. I hope to further my study on intercultural work and develop a deep cultural intelligence.
- I found the workshops very beneficial in terms of improving my own teaching, developing new collaborations with colleagues and increasing my own awareness of intercultural issues. It was a challenging and eye-opening few days and an opportunity which I would encourage all of my colleagues to participate in as well.
- To be master educators, to enrich all our students (domestic and international) we need to begin interculturalizing our teaching. By doing this we will not only be benefitting our students, but will enrich ourselves.
- I really enjoyed the past 4 days. It has opened my eyes, or reawakened me, to the core elements of intercultural communication. The facilitators were excellent.
- This has been a very thought provoking experience. I have lots of ideas and questions to consider. I really liked how the models shared and experience gave me a basis for practical application and something I can take back to my own work.
- This has been a tremendously informative and transformative experience for me. The focus on experiential activities is spot on!
- I loved this course and now I want more!

Most significant thing participants take away:

- Confirming that my philosophy of teaching is going in the right direction
- The motivation to continue my learning and transform it into specific action
- Awareness, mindfulness
- So many ideas to develop and implement
- Excitement to launch new curriculum
- Great resources
- Having a solid plan
- Ideas and inspiration
- Community building

- I'm stoked about new ways of knowing, different exercises to engage students for affective learning!
- Better awareness of what I don't know in relation to intercultural interactions
- Direction in relation to how to develop my intercultural competence
- Concrete ideas for the classroom
- Informative frameworks of reference to understand cultural differences
- Theoretical models
- Great variety of resources
- This is important stuff!
